Calgary police to review policy on use of force

SCRUTINY

Goal to reduce fatalities in police-involved incidents

Lucie Edwardson Metro | Calgary

The Calgary Police Service (CPS) has enlisted a retired chief justice to conduct an independent review into possible systemic issues related to officers' use of lethal force.

The review, announced Wednesday, will look at policies, procedures, practices, training, equipment and the overall culture within CPS in relation to the use of lethal force in conducting police work.

Last year there were 10 policeinvolved shootings in Calgary, five of which were fatal.

The goal is to make recommendations that could lead to zero fatalities in future policeinvolved incidents.

Chief Justice Neil Wittmann, who retired from the Alberta Court of Queen's Bench earlier this year, will head the independent review.

He said the point is not to "assign blame on individuals or institutions" but rather to evaluate any ongoing practices and offer recommendations to make things better.

As part of the review, Wittmann has been asked to consult with experts, stakeholders and CPS members if necessary. He said he's already received a few emails from members who want to offer input.

Wittmann said he's also open to meeting with members of the public and families of those who have died as a result of CPS lethal force.

"The emphasis is to avoid situations where the use of force is necessary," he said, noting that sometimes it will be necessary.

The budget for the initiative, which is expected to last a year — or longer — is currently $500,000.

RCMP say the man arrested for the hit-and-run of a Polish scooter driver earlier this week was also wanted as a suspect in a number of armed robberies.

Police allege he was fleeing the scene of a robbery when the collision occurred.

Christopher Ferguson, 27, of Airdrie, Alta. is now facing 20 charges including robbery with an offensive weapon, assault with a weapon, failure to comply with probation conditions, impaired operation of a vehicle causing bodily harm, failing to remain at the scene of a collision, uttering threats and public mischief.

His first court appearance was scheduled for May 17 in Calgary provincial court. METRO STAFF

Affordable housing units open in Crescent Heights

Work is now complete on the city's newest affordable housing development in Crescent Heights.

The three-storey, 16-unit property is located at 210, 15 Avenue NE. Two units are barrier-free and one was built to accommodate a visually impaired tenant. Rent will be set according to a mixed-income model, according to the city. METRO

Correction

In a story from May 17, titled "Suburbs feel 'bait and switched," it indicated that the additional cost to build the Green Line out to McKenzie Towne would be between $500 and $550 million. That amount would actually allow the build out to Seton, according to the city. Metro regrets the error.

Association pushing for underground, city eyeing cost

Helen Pike Metro | Calgary

Can't go over it, you can't go under it — oh no, you've got to go through it.

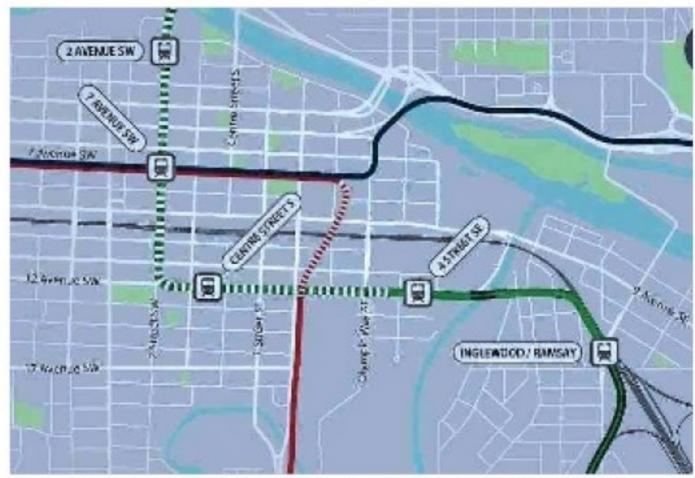

Continuing the Green Line underground into Victoria Park isn't financially viable according to the City of Calgary. But the Beltline Neighbourhood Association (BNA) is imploring that it be considered for the future planning opportunities for the area.

City spokeswoman Julie Yepishina-Geller said the city's not yet confident enough to go public with their cost estimates, but she said in general terms the city's targeting a $500 to $600 million dollar cost range for the Beltline to Inglewood and Ramsay Green Line Segment.

"The fully tunnelled option is not within that range based on our calculations to this point and there's a lot of factors that could influence this cost," Yepishina-Geller said.

She said land required and technical challenges related to a fully tunnelled option aren't known yet. Each of the four options on the table she said have challenges, and none of them are a silver bullet. Further, she noted there's no clear-cut consensus from stakeholders.

Peter Oliver, president of the BNA said given the potential of a new arena, Olympics and the $500 million dollar expan-

There needs to be some hybrid solution here, and I know the city is working on that hybrid. Susan Veres sion of the convention centre, he hopes the city can get the alignment right.

Once construction gets going, he thinks there may be some funding opportunities to be found to help get an underground station for Victoria Park and the Beltline.

"For the sake of recognizing that it is a good solution, at least it should be put there for evaluation," Oliver said. "They haven't made public the cost of all of the acquisition that's needed for their 10 Avenue alignment, and the potential loss of tax base."

The East Village is a master plan community of 49 acres, but Victoria Park is another beast at 500 acres. Which is why Susan Veres said the Calgary Municipal Land Corporation brought in expertise to help them create an urban plan.

When they look at Victoria Park, what's clear is that traffic flows easily into the park, but not out and the fact that they have an LRT going into Victoria Park, at grade or underground, is opportunistic from a planning perspective.

But while it's desirable, Veres said the city has to be mindful of the cost of delivering the infrastructure without interrupting the rest of the Green Line, or makes the "ineffective in its vision."

She said the vision of burying the line on 12 Avenue, and bringing it back up for Victoria Park, unless it's highly integrated in the community, may not work.

"It might render lands around the Green Line useless, and therefore undevelopable," Veres said. "There needs to be some hybrid solution here, and I know the city is working on that hybrid."

Veres said a lot of people, including some of CMLC's planners, have questions about the implications of not burying the line through Victoria Park.

"If we can all agree that we can live with those conditions in Victoria Park then great, but we need to have that conversation," Veres said. "The city is having that conversation."

CARBON TAX

Province changes rebates

Alberta is bringing in new rules to make amends to 4,400 families who lost a loved one and were ordered to pay back their carbon tax rebate.

"For a relatively small number of families, the program didn't work as it should have," Finance Minister Joe Ceci said Wednesday.

"These families received bluntly worded letters from the Canada Revenue Agency asking them to repay all or part of the rebate because the death of a loved one changed their eligibility.

"Grieving families should not face the indignity of a collection letter demanding the repayment of a benefit that is supposed to make their lives better."

Ceci made the changes in a tax statutes amendment bill introduced in the legislature Wednesday afternoon.

The province will no longer seek the return of rebates due to death. Those received the rebate on behalf of a loved one and paid it back will be reimbursed. All rebates will be dispatched quarterly. Some smaller amounts had been paid out in a lump sum.

The payouts are tied to a broad-based carbon tax the province introduced Jan. 1 which increased costs at gasoline pumps and on home heating bills. The tax is intended to pay for initiatives and programs to move Alberta to a more environmentally friendly economy.

There were stories of a collection demand on a cancer-stricken mom who used her $180 carbon tax rebate to buy gifts for her kids before she died.

A senior whose wife died said he got a letter demanding he return the carbon tax rebate she had received.

The government says 1.2 million carbon levy repayments totalling $150 million have been sent out so far this year.

Chief Justice Neil Wittman will lead the Calgary Police Service use-of-force review. CONTRIBUTED

Use-of-force review applauded by family

POLICE

Officer fatally shot Anthony Heffernan four times in 2015

Lucie Edwardson Metro | Calgary

The family of a Calgary man who was shot and killed by a Calgary Police Service member in 2015 said they're pleased to hear that the force has launched a review into their use of force.

Patrick Heffernan's son, Anthony, 27, who was battling drug addictions was shot four times — three to the head and neck — after police were called to the Super 8 Motel on Barlow Trail in March of 2015 to reports of a customer who had failed to check out on time. The family is now suing CPS for wrongful death.

The CPS announced Wednesday that they'd initiated the review and hired retired Chief Justice Neil Wittman to lead it. They expect it will take around a year and will look at policies, procedures, equipment and reviewing professional standards complaints and previous use-offorce situations.

The news of the review is welcome for the Heffernan family.

"It's good to hear that they're launching a review into their use of force and that someone who is outside of the Calgary police is looking into it," said Heffernan.

He said there simply has to be changes.

"Everyone in Calgary realizes that there are many shootings and deaths at the hands of the Calgary police and there has to be changes so this stops," said Heffernan. "In most of the cases police claim they fear for their lives, but in many of the situations — particularly when people are unarmed, as Anthony was — there are many other things that can be done."

Heffernan said it's not just can be measured.

with shootings, but with the CPS' handling of confrontations in general.

Wittman said he'd be open to hearing from families affected by use of force, and Heffernan said his family will be reaching out to him to offer their input and perspective on the issue.

Mount Royal University justice professor Dr. Kelly Sundberg said this is an excellent first step.

"I do think it's needed and I know the justice will look at this from a very informed legal perspective," he said, adding that the justice department at MRU would be happy to lend him their expertise.

Sundberg said it's important to know that this is a first step that will lead to recommendations, and then the difficulty will be measuring the implementation of the recommendations.

He said he hopes there will be some mechanism where progress can be measured.

Indigenous groups would use courts to block project

A coalition of Indigenous groups from Canada and the U.S. has signed a declaration against the Keystone XL pipeline, vowing to use the courts and whatever other means necessary to block the controversial project.

At a signing ceremony in Calgary Wednesday, leaders of the Blackfoot Confederacy and Great Sioux Nation representing tribes in both countries called for more dialogue and consultations on the project, which would run through their traditional lands.

"It's our responsibility to protect, and get involved, advocate and prevent this type of threat from crossing traditional Blackfoot lands," said Chief Stanley Charles Grier of the Piikani nation at the ceremony.

Chairman Brandon Sazue of the Crow Creek Sioux Tribe in South Dakota said they hope to use the "right way" of opposing the pipeline, including the courts and negotiations, but as a last means he and others are prepared to protest like they did against the Dakota Access Pipeline.

Councilwoman Casey Camp-Horinek of the Ponca Nation of Oklahoma, who was arrested at the Dakota Access protests alongside Sazue, said she's also ready to protest again.

"We are hoping to find a peaceful resolution," said Camp-Horinek, "but all of us understand that if it's necessary for us to create a camp again, and to stand in opposition, we'll do that."

She said she's opposed to the pipeline because it and other resource extraction and > development projects have threatened her people.

Earlier this year, U.S. President Donald Trump revived the pipeline proposed by TransCanada Corp. (TSX:TRP) when he granted it a presidential permit, reversing Barack Obama's rejection in 2015.

Health records delayed

Albertans are going to have to continue waiting for a highly anticipated online personal health record portal, the province said Wednesday.

The secure portal would give Albertans access to a threemonth history of medications dispensed from a community pharmacy, results for over 50 common lab tests, and the option to track personal health information such as blood pressure.

It's the second phase in a larger online records project started by the former PC government and was originally supposed to be complete by 2012.

But five years past that deadline, the current government has stumbled into a new snag: the platform wasn't designed to be compatible with all mobile devices.

"We are focusing on getting the Personal Health Record compatible for mobile use, which it appears the former government failed to plan for when it launched this project in 2011," Health Minister Sarah Hoffman told Metro.

Her ministry previously hoped to launch the platform in spring or early summer 2017.

Alberta Health said it's currently seeking a vendor who can make the platform compatible with mobile devices and hopes it will be available "sometime" in the 2018/19 fiscal year.

What Alberta can learn from Denver

OIL BUST

Former mayor visits Calgary with recession proof advice

Aaron Chatha Metro Calgary

In the 1980s, the city of Denver. Colorado was weathering an oil bust, similar to how Alberta is now. Denver not only managed to survive the bust, but also become one of America's top five metropolitan economies.

Former Mayor of Denver, Federico Pena and the former CEO of Denver Economic Development, Tom Clark, stopped by Calgary this week to share a bit about how they turned Denver around, in hopes Alberta can do something similar.

DIVERISIFICATION

In 1983, things were pretty bad in Denver. There was a 31 per cent office vacancy rate and for the first time in Colorado's history, there were more people leaving than coming in.

People were frightened. Pena said they had talked about diversifying the economy for a long time, but that was when they finally brought the business community together to create a relationship with local government and non-profits to find a way to bolster every opportunity.

And they were willing to spend the money to make it happen.

"That was the beginning of what became one of the most collaborative metropolitan regions in the country, and one of the most dynamic economies today," said Pena.

FOUR STEPS

Pena said there are four steps to fixing the economy.

There needs to be a strategic plan that supports a broader vision, the city needs to bring every sector together under the strategic plan, work very hard to implement those ideas and strategies and finally realizing that you're not going to turn things around in a year or two.

"It's going to require continuous investment and commitment over a period of years," said Pena.

THE ARTS

Usually, the arts are one of the first areas that gets cut when trying to save money.

"The arts are kind of like a gun, you'd rather have it and not need it, than not have it," Clark said.

The arts are important to recruiting companies into your city. This means understanding all the things an employee might be interested in - and if you don't have a strong arts industry, you'll lose opportunities. Clark said it's just as important as having strong schools.

In Denver, there is a tax specifically designated to keep cultural amenities alive. The Denver Centre for the Performing Arts is now the second largest U.S. performing arts centre, next to New York.

"You can't have a great city unless you have great arts as part of it," Pena said.

Self-defence claimed prior to Shyback verdict

Lucie Edwardson Metro | Calgary

Justice Rosemary Nation will deliver her verdict on Thursday that decides the fate of a Calgary man accused of strangling his common-law wife to death and burying her remains in a make-shift cement tomb in their basement.

Allan Shyback, 40, is charged with second-degree murder and improperly interfering with human remains in the 2012 death of his common-law partner and mother of two, Lisa Mitchell.

A "Mr. Big" sting operation was launched in 2013, in which Shyback was befriended by a number of undercover police officers, and ultimately resulted in his 2014 confession and arrest.

Throughout the court proceedings Shyback claimed to have been a victim of domestic abuse and that he killed Mitchell in self-defence.

While the Crown claims Shyback's claims of abuse was a "spin," his lawyer, Balfour Der, called for his acquittal saying the Crown's arguments were baseless and even defied logic.

Shyback does not deny he's guilty of improperly interfering with human remains, and has expressed remorse for killing Mitchell.

Lisa Mitchell's body was found nearly two years after she was reported missing, cps

Teen speaks up to preserve farmland

DEVELOPMENT

43-acre area the potential site of nearly 900 units

Brodie Thomas Metro | Calgary

All of her life, Hayley Ellerman has lived within site of the Hawkwood Farm in the northwest community of Arbour Lake.

"There's something cool about it," she said. "Having that piece of nature there."

Now the Grade 11 student is speaking out about the planned development of a 43-acre, privately owned parcel of land.

Ellerman hasn't been on the farmland because it has always been private property, but she walks her dog along the edge and enjoys seeing the area.

She said the property has four ponds and wetlands, which are all home to a variety of wildlife. She's even seen a moose living there for a time about two years ago.

"They put signs on the fence outskirts saying not to approach it," she said.

Once she got wind of Hopewell Residential's plans to build on the site. Ellerman wrote to her ward councillor with concerns. She was told there isn't much she can do because it's private.

"I would hope that they don't develop all of it. The ideal thing would be not to develop any of it. But because it's private land, we can't really do a petition."

Scott Hamilton, director of marketing and communications with Hopewell Residential, said the company is still in the early stages of planning and gathering feedback from the community.

He said they held an open the wildlife that thrives in house with the community in April, where they heard from people who are excited for the opportunity to perhaps downsize into a condo, but also from longtime residents who had concerns about the green space.

Hamilton noted that once it's developed, people from all parts of Arbour Lake will be able to access the developed park space.

"What we've proposed would try to accommodate as much community traffic as possible," he said, "This would be open to all of Arbour Lake."

Hopewell's current plans involve four acres of green space throughout the development.

Hamilton said they're actively making changes to the plan based on what they heard at the open house.

"At this moment, nothing is approved. Nothing is final, per se. It's really just in the process working with the community, working with the city for a plan that works for everyone," he said.

Hayley Ellerman stands outside of the Hawkwood Farm lands near her Arbour Lake home. She thinks the land is worth preserving, but Hopewell Residential has plans to build there. JENNIFER FRIESEN/FOR METRO

Audit: RCMP can't police themselves

Mounties, CPS and EPS fail to deal with harassment

Lucie Edwardson Metro | Calgary

Former Calgary Police Service (CPS) members say they believe a scathing report on the RCMP's decades of failure to deal with workplace bullying and harassment is synonymous with CPS and other police forces across the country.

On Monday, the RCMP watchdog agency, the Civilian Review and Complaints Commission (CRCC), released the results of its in-depth audit of the force's policies and practices and concluded the Mounties are incapable of policing themselves.

Former CPS officers Marlene Hope and Jen Magnus - who are advocates for victims of bullying and harassment within CPS said when they saw the results of the audit their first impression was the CPS could benefit a lot from using the findings and recommendations from that report.

"You could take the report and replace RCMP with CPS or EPS (Edmonton Police Service) or Lethbridge — and the parallels exist," said Hope.

The report calls for greater civilian expertise in the RC-MP's leadership structure and coincides with a move to organizers of a union drive to press for some kind of joint management board.

The women said more civilian expertise is something CPS would also benefit from.

"We think CPS is ultimately a business," said Hope. "Police are hired to police and shouldn't because they don't have the skill or training necessary - run the corporation."

Magnus, who abruptly resigned from the CPS at a public police commission meeting, said they need independent civilian experts brought in to conduct research, run human resources and "run the business."

They said CPS is currently lacking independence and objectivity and needs to build trust, and that these people need to have power.

"It needs to be so that when they take recommendations to the executive they can't just shut them down - because they don't know how to implement change," said Magnus. "There needs to be someone to oversee these changes."

Hope and Magnus said they saw many parallels in the report, including a culture of fear, which they say makes the problem seem smaller than it really is because people are afraid of coming forward with their experiences.

While technology is moving fast, the city's not ready to ditch the LRT and go full autonomous - but they are one step closer to testing it out.

On Wednesday, councillors heard an exciting report about the future of transit in Calgary. The high-level briefing talked about the impli-

The city's goal is to become a leader in autonomous vehicle testing, which is why administration suggested a low-speed autonomous vehicle pilot. The city's also hoping to participate in the Government of Canada's Smart Cities Challenge which is a pool of $300 million in funding for city-building in-

"We have to start developing policy environments," said Coun. Gian-Carlo Carra.

He said in a lot of scenarios with autonomous vehicles there's nightmare scenarios and beautiful scenarios.

Councillors approved the report for information, and council will ultimately decide if an autonomous transit pilot between Telus Spark and the Zoo is a go.

There's a little magic in the air the annual Fairy Tales Queer Film Festival is back for its 19th year in Calgary.

The annual festival addresses a growing need to tell LGBTO stories, and link the community with other Calgarians.

"LGBTQ people are still lacking in appropriate film representation that tells their stories in a significant way," said James Demers, festival executive director.

"Fairy Tales can bring diverse points of view within the community together so we can have a communal conversation about it."

He added it's great exposure for the general community who are seeking allyship, or want to learn more about the community.

"The easiest way, and most human way we've done that throughout time, is to listen to each others' stories," he said.

With a ton of programming this year, Demers offered a few must-see recommendations.

TWO HARD THINGS, TWO SOFT THINGS

This film covers the creation of one of the first Pride events in Nunavut, exploring how colonization and religion shamed and erased traditional Inuit beliefs about sexuality and family structure.

Now a new generation is 'unshaming' their past.

BOUND

"I call it the film that made the Matrix," explained Demers. Bound is the debut directorial feature by the Wachowski's, before they changed the scifi landscape with The Matrix.

A chance elevator encounter between Violet and Corky sets off a passionate love affair, and a plot to escape from the mob.

Bound is this year's Retro film at the festival, and will be shown on VHS at the theatre.

QUEER PEOPLE OF COLOUR PANEL

The social justice night will be centered around issues pertaining to queer people of colour. The night will feature a shorts package, feature film and a panel in partnership with YYCVoices.

SPOKEN WORD

A queer take on grown-ups reading things they wrote as kids.

"It's really fun, there's a bar in the theatre, and it's a great opportunity to hear people's stories in different ways," Demers said. "There's nothing more humbling than reading your childhood journals."

The Fairy Tales Film Festival takes place May 18 to 27. For more information, visit www. fairytalesfilmfest.com.

Taxi driver rescues stuck ducklings

Helen Pike Metro | Calgary

On Mother's Day, Checker Cab driver Zimary Rahad's instincts kicked in after he saw a frantic mother duck waddling by a storm drain.

She had waddled by the drain and some of her ducklings seemed to have fallen through the grate.

He pulled over immediately.

UP TO

"I had time, five or six minutes before picking up my customer," Rahad said.

"I was trying to help them survive, finally another gentlemen working in front of his garage, I called him to come help me lift the screen."

Luckily, the grate wasn't too heavy.

He said the mother came and the babies were safely pulled out of the drain - he even had time to film some of the rescue.

"She was just walking around the grate and looking for help," Rahad said.

Once all nine ducklings were safe and sound the mother went on her way, and The duck had he watched to make her babies sure they were OK.

In his 13 years of driving, he hasn't helped these kinds of passengers before and in the end, the family didn't need a ride. But his own fare? He got there on time.

"I was so excited to help them, happy to help them survive," Rahad said.

"They were so cute, I was so excited. Safely we pulled them out."

The video was a hit at the Checker office, and eventually a video was posted online - it has more than 1.000 views so far and his company is calling him a hero.

Bank may avoid risky projects: Sohi

Refugee reforms score failing grade

The government's new agency for financing major construction projects might take a pass on proposals that pose too great a risk for taxpayers when they're asked to make a private sector idea a reality, the infrastructure minister says.

Amarjeet Sohi said the key test for the so-called infrastructure bank, which combines public and private funding for major projects, will be whether it is financially viable in the long run to provide the necessary returns to public and private investors.

The government will be taking on financial risk regardless of what projects go ahead, but only on its portion of the funding, not the entire cost of the project, Sohi said in an interview Wednesday with The Canadian Press.

The Liberal government has been parrying opposition questions about the agency and just how much public money will

An effort currently underway in Toronto to create a literary award recognizing Indigenous voices sounded like music to his ears.

Lawyer Robin Parker launched an online fundraising campaign this week with the goal of supporting upcoming Indigenous writers. It was partly a response to the ongoing debate over cultural appropriation - which was sparked by an editorial in Write magazine that advocated for the creation of the "appropriation prize."

In just over two days, Parker's campaign has raised over $30,000, beyond her initial goal of $10,000. She says she's reaching out to Indigenous organizations across the country so they can be the ones who manage the award.

"That would be extremely important in encouraging young indigenous writers to continue to tell our own stories," said Monkman, who will moderate a panel discussion on Indigenous Voices Rising next month at the Toronto Reference Library.

Journalists for Human Rights executive director Rachel Pulfer called the award initiative the "most positive outcome" from the appropriation controversy.

The group works with Indigenous youth across Canada to support emerging journalists, and such an award is one of their priorities for the next three years.

"It's absolutely crucial that we turn the page from this conversation on a theft prize and bring it into celebrating Indigenous voices," she said, noting the group would be keen to join forces with the new campaign.

"This is a very important piece of the puzzle."

Special counsel appointed

President faces heightened pressure

Besieged from all sides, the Trump administration appointed former FBI director Robert Mueller as a special counsel to oversee the federal investigation into allegations Russia and Donald Trump's campaign collaborated to influence the 2016 presidential election.

The appointment came as Democrats insisted ever more loudly that someone outside Trump's Justice Department must handle the politically charged investigation. An increasing number of Republicans, too, have joined in calling for Congress to dig deeper, especially after Trump fired FBI director James Comey who had been leading the bureau's probe.

Earlier Wednesday, Trump complained in a commencement address that "no politician in history" has been treated worse by his foes, even as exasperated fellow Republicans slowly joined the clamour for a significant investigation into whether he tried to quash the FBI's probe.

Three congressional committees, all led by Republicans, confirmed they wanted to hear from Comey, whose notes about a February meeting with the president indicate Trump urged him to drop the bureau's investigation of fired National Security adviser Michael Flynn. Congressional investigators are seeking Comey's memos, as well as documents from the Justice Department related to the firing.

Many Democrats also were calling for an independent spe-

The political storm, coupled with the still-potent fallout from Trump's recent disclosure of classified information to Russian diplomats, overshadowed all else in the capital and beyond.

CHANTAL HÉBERT ON JAGMEET SINGH, CULTURE AND QUEBEC

A betting person might wager that Jagmeet Singh — unless he stumbles badly and quickly out of the gate - could soon be the candidate to beat in the battle for Thomas Mulcair's succession.

With solid roots in the Ontario NDP — whose deputy leader he was until this week and in multicultural Canada, Singh has the elements of a potential leadership juggernaut at his disposal.

The Sikh community is one of the most politically engaged in the country and Ontario offers the largest provincial pool of potential NDP supporters.

Singh has no federal experience but that did not prevent Alexa McDonough who had spent all her years in the Nova Scotia arena before moving on to Parliament Hill and Jack Layton who cut his teeth at Toronto City Hall from winning the leadership.

On a week when France has sworn in a 39-year-old president, it is hard to make a case that Singh, 38, is too young for the job of third party leader in the House of Commons.

He does not have much of a profile outside of Ontario and NDP circles. But then none of the four MPs who are already in the running is a national household name either. On that score, suffice it to say that there may have been more words written about Singh's leadership prospects before and since his entry in the NDP race than the sum of the

But that may amount to selling Quebecers short. Yes, the NDP took a hit in Quebec over the nigab issue but it was the scores of lapsed Liberal supporters who returned home that really pulled the rug from under Mulcair. Trudeau almost tripled the party's is easier to secure the leadership with little or no support from some regions, especially if one enjoys a lot of backing in Ontario and British Columbia. Those two provinces have tended to tower above the others on the NDP membership rolls.

This is a roundabout way to say that Singh would not need to win Quebec or even to do particularly well in that province to score a decisive leadership victory next fall. In the last election, the party was routed in Ontario and wiped off the map of Atlantic Canada. In the circumstances, more than a few New Democrats might rank recouping the lost ground in those regions above other considerations.

With two leaders from Quebec — Justin Trudeau and the Bloc Québécois' Martine Ouellet — and possibly a third province under any leadership Still, it took half-a-century for the NDP to establish a presence in Quebec. No one wants to see Jack Layton's parting gift to his party squandered.

All of which has many New Democrats — starting with the party's 16 Quebec MPs quietly wondering how Quebec, given its strong prosecular bent, would take to a turban-wearing Sikh NDP leader. It was not so long ago that the Parti Québécois was campaigning on a promise to impose a secular dress code on all public servants.

Based on the niqab episode of the 2015 election, there are those who would readily answer that going into the 2019 campaign in Quebec under a leader whose religious identity is a distinguishing feature could be a recipe for disaster.

vote - mostly at the expense of New Democrats. Quebec's secularism debate has so far been a family discussion that has for the most part involved politicians who do not actually belong to a visible religious minority.

Singh's French would put to shame some of the former Conservative ministers who have spent the past year calling on their party to overlook their glaring deficiencies in the other official language.

No one should presume that an NDP leader who can otherwise connect in French with Quebecers would automatically lose the party's audience in the province on grounds of religious diversity.

The Trump train is derailing. Loyalists, jump off now.

Vinay Menon Torstar News Service

There are many mysteries in the universe: The statues on Easter Island. The Unicorn Frappuccino. But the biggest mystery of all is how anyone with a working brain can still cheer for Donald Trump.

On Tuesday evening, as the words "obstruction of justice" and "impeachment" shot into the Washington air like firecrackers, Jeffrey Lord reprised his role as the president's chief toady on CNN to inform viewers: "We are once again in high-tech lynching mode."

There was a glint of forlorn defeat in his eyes, like a man who keeps trying to convince his adult children the tooth fairy is real. Lord decided to board the Make America Great Again Express a long time ago. Now that it has derailed, he's trapped inside the wreckage, blaming everyone except the conductor. And he's not alone.

At the midway point of Trump's worst week in office - and that's saying something - his travelling band of surrogates, liars, bootlickers, enablers, brown-nosers and excuse-makers are in quite a

They can cling to fantasy or reality. Fantasy: Trump is a victim of anything other than gross incompetence. Reality: Trump is on the verge of implosion and they are destined to become collateral damage.

Instead of defending the indefensible, Lord might give some thought to escaping. What he can't do is expect things to get better. They are only going to get worse.

What more can Trump do to make this clear? Twist off the heads of live kittens on national television? Invade Canada? Strip down and streak across Pennsylvania Avenue with the nuclear codes tattooed on his buttocks?

This week we learned Trump handles highly sensitive classified information the way a grade schooler treats a cooties secret. We learned he asked the FBI to stop investigating his inner circle, as if the FBI were a drywall contractor gouging the Trump Corporation in Manila.

We learned what we already knew: Trump is so unfit for public office, so incapable of not shooting himself in the foot while wearing his socks on his ears, the world would be better off if the Oval Office were occupied by a Talking Elmo glued atop a Roomba. There'd be much less danger and the floors would be clean.

It's one thing for Fox News, a longtime outpost for Republican talking points, to ignore, deflect or downplay the latest bombshells. Fox is the equivalent of North Korean state media. Any network that employs Lou Dobbs, Tucker Carlson and Sean Hannity the axis of doofus - is not a network that is serious about reality.

But that still leaves a startling number of presumably decent people like Lord who have nothing to gain and everything to lose by continuing to shelter Trump from a crap storm of the president's making.

This week, Trump proved the Never Trumpers were always right. So the Trumpers Forever now have a choice: escape the mangled wreckage or perish inside.

CANNES

Palme d'Or jury is split on the merits of online films

Peter Howell life@metronews.ca

The war of big vs. small movie screens at the Cannes Film Festival heated up Wednesday as Palme d'Or jury president Pedro Almodovar declared that prizes shouldn't be given to onlineonly films.

"I personally would not conceive not only the Palme d'Or but any other prize being given to a film and then not being able to see this film on the large screen," the veteran Spanish filmmaker told an international press audience on the festival's opening day.

Calling it "the debate of this year," Almodovar was clearly referring to the two Netflix films among the 19 competing for the Palme: Bong Joon-ho's sci-fi fantasy Okja, starring Tilda Swinton and Jake Gyllenhaal; and Noah Baumbach's The Meyerowitz Stories, a dysfunctional-family drama starring Dustin Hoffman, Emma Thompson, Adam Sandler and Ben Stiller.

Online giant Netflix has caused a furor in Cannes for refusing to commit to a traditional theatrical release in France of the two films prior to online distribution. Cannes has fought back by saying Netflix, which is in the Palme competition for the first time this year, won't be allowed into the 2018 festival unless it changes its policy.

Almodovar obviously sides with the festival, but his statement, read out in Spanish, English and French, was highly unusual given his leading role on the nine-member jury. The other jurors are Hollywood actors Will Smith and Jessica Chastain, German writer/director Maren Ade (Toni Erdmann); Chinese actress Fan Bingbing (X-Men: Days of Future Past); French actress/singer/ filmmaker Agnès Jaoui (The Taste of Others); South Korean writer/director Park Chan-wook (Oldboy); Italian writer/director Paolo Sorrentino (The Great Beauty); and French-Lebanese composer Gabriel Yared (Xavier Dolan's It's Only the End of the World).

Normally, the jurors and their president go out of their way at the start of Cannes to declare their impartiality regarding the films they will be viewing and judging over the 12-day festival.

Almodovar obviously thinks the battle to preserve big-screen dominance is too important to ignore, even if it effectively suggest that Okja and The Meyerowitz Stories now have little chance of winning the Palme at festival's end on May 28, no matter how much the jury may like them.

He said he's willing to "acknowledge (and) celebrate the new technologies and the possibilities that they offer to us," but he'll stop short of giving them prizes if they result in films destined only to appear on TV and computer screens.

"I do acknowledge them, but (as long) as I'm alive, I'll be fighting for one thing that I'm afraid the new generation is not aware of: the capacity of hypnosis of the large screen for the viewer."

Almodovar's attack on Netflix caused some discomfort for actor Smith, sitting near him. His new film Bright, a fantasy cop thriller co-starring Noomi Rapace, is scheduled for a Netflixonly release in December.

Smith rose to the defence of Netflix, saying he uses the service at home and his family also enjoy regular visits to movie theatres.

"I have a 16-year-old and an 18-year-old and a 24-year-old at home. They go to the movies twice a week, and they watch Netflix. There's very little cross between going to the cinema and watching what they watch on Netflix."

Netflix allows Smith's children to "watch films they otherwise wouldn't have seen. It has broadened my children's global cinematic comprehension."

Smith was an unusual pick for the Cannes jury, given his career as one of the world's biggest stars, which normally lands him in blockbusters like Men in Black, Bad Boys and Suicide Squad rather than artier fare.

He joked about how he's excited about being on the Cannes jury, and he intends to watch closely and learn from the experience.

Smith admitted, though, to being shocked when his agent told him he'd have to watch three films per day for the better part of two weeks, with screenings beginning as early as 8:30 a.m. each day.

"I was probably 14 years old the last time I watched three movies in a day," he said. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

ROOKS

Why Elizabeth Strout believes anything truly is possible

Sue Carter For Metro Canada

A funny thing happened years after Elizabeth Strout's linkedstory collection Olive Kitteridge won the 2009 Pulitzer Prize. Strout discovered a group of women in Greenwich, Connecticut, were meeting every Monday to "talk their Oliveness out" at the local Starbucks in honour of her misanthropic protagonist, an outspoken retired small-town teacher who compulsively alienates everyone around her.

"They were very Greenwich in the sense that they were welloff and had their pearls in their ears," says Strout. "They were not even remotely my idea of someone who would appreciate Olive."

As Olive Kitteridge was being adapted into a multiple Emmy Award-winning HBO miniseries starring Frances McDormand,

Elizabeth Strout's Lucy Barton returns in her new collection Anything Is Possible. CONTRIBUTED

Strout was busy crafting another complex character. In My Name is Lucy Barton, a successful author reunites with her estranged mother and recalls horrific memories of her lonely poverty-stricken childhood.

Lucy returns in Strout's new linked story collection, Anything is Possible, and although she only makes a brief physical appearance, her presence (and newly published memoir) still haunts many residents of the fictional Maine hometown.

Strout, who calls herself a "very messy worker," says her desk is always covered in pieces of paper, many of which became the genesis for Anything is Possible.

She sketched out most of the stories while still writing My Name is Lucy Barton, realizing "I had these nuggets of information of these people."

Small-town life through Strout's vision of humanity she is guided by a sense of intuition about her characters — includes closeted gay husbands, a Vietnam vet with PTSD, a wife who participates in her rich husband's assaults on other women and a poignant yet painful mother-daughter reunion.

"I never judge my characters when I'm writing about them," Strout says. "That's the fun part of my job, to not have judgement at all and just let them do whatever it they're going to do and be who they are."

Like many of her characters, Strout spent some of her childhood in a small Maine town, in a home connected to nearby relatives via a dirt road. Her parents didn't believe in frivolous entertainment like television, which meant Strout — who was a lawyer before turning to writing full-time — had to rely on her inner resources for amusement.

"I spent a great deal of time alone and there wasn't a lot of stimulation," she says. "I understood from a young age how to live in my head. I was also able to observe an awful lot and note a lot of details. I was always curious about what it felt like to be another person."

It's not as if Strout's characters are trapped in time, but they do reside outside of our cultural obsessions. They will never end up on Instagram seeking likes for their food pics, or modelling for selfies in bar washrooms. She writes passionately about those who are more concerned with just getting by in the world. "I'm just so interested in the most ordinary kind of person," Strout says. "Someone who is just living their lives. I'm so interested in the inner world — everybody has one."

Street speculates that her dedication to ordinary folk is perhaps why those turned-out Greenwich women with their fancy pearls created an Olivia Kitteridge fan club. "If I can write something emotionally truthful for a character then I think there's a chance that will emotionally resonate with readers," Strout says.

"Their lives are not like the lives of the people I'm writing about, but if there's something emotionally truthful enough they can engage with that person on the page or even recognize something about themselves they had forgotten."

Ashley Graham sizes up the fashion biz in memoir

INTERVIEW

Seeing is believing in vision boards, role models

Ashley Graham may have curves, but she hates the term plus-size.

"Does any woman really just come in and say, 'I'm a plus-size woman'? Maybe as a defence mechanism or maybe as a way to kind of cope with fitting into society but ... I just think it's divisive. I think labelling and putting a name on women in certain categories because (of) a (size) number inside of their pants isn't really getting us any farther in life."

She made it into the mainstream when she appeared on the cover of the Sports Illustrated Swimsuit 2016 issue. That led to other opportunities, including the cover of Vogue magazine and a gig as a judge on America's Next Top Model.

Now she's written a memoir: A New Model: What Confidence, Beauty & Power Really Look Like.

She talked about her role models, achievements and critics in a recent interview.

You're an advocate for healthy body acceptance. How is the fashion industry responding?

The fashion industry is into it. I think what's really great is the fashion industry has really said, 'You know what, we're about inclusion right now.' We've had the body era. We've had the waif era, now here we are in the inclusivity era and it's race, it's age, it's gender, it's size.

You're known for your curves but you've been criticized when it appears that you've lost weight. What do you say to that?

My weight is going to go up and down but, also, nobody can dictate what I'm doing. I'm a true size 14, I'm happy with my body, nobody has dictatorship over who I am.

You write about fashion and curvy girls and how hard it is to find great clothes in bigger sizes.

I don't know who's making those clothes. I'm ready to come out with a line of clothes that's affordable, that's for all sizes. The beauty of being a curvier girl is that we're all shaped so differently. But it's sad because I really think there's a lot of designers who do go up to a size 22, 24 but buyers are not buying them because they don't think we're gonna come in and buy it. So, it's a vicious cycle, and I don't know where it starts and stops ... all I know is I'm talking about it and there are some designers who have been very open. Prabal Gurung is one who put curvy girls on the runway. Christian Siriano and Michael Kors, too, so it's happening.

You have a stylist and you know designers. Have any said they won't dress you?

I haven't experienced firsthand negative feelings of designers not dressing me because of my size, but if I did ... you'd hear about it.

You're a believer in vision boards.

Vision boards are so important. If it's not even an actual vision board up in your room, then write down what you want. There's really something about getting it out and putting (it on) paper or a corkboard or whatever your thing is. I'm not a DIY girl whatsoever. It's really for me to be able to see something before I go to bed and when I wake up in the morning to remember what I want, but also to say, you know what, let god's will be done and hopefully this works out. I had Sports Illustrated on there, I had Vogue on there. It took me a couple years for the whole vision board to happen, but here we are. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

THE SHOW: The Real Housewives of Toronto, Season 1, Episode 7

THE MOMENT: Elise!

"You look very business professional," personal assistant Elise assures Real Housewife Roxy, her flamboyant boss, as they enter a "business meeting" with Somen Mondal, a pal of Roxy's rich hubbie.

Roxy has an idea for an app to allow women to shop each other's closets. "Because I never want to wear something more than once and I imagine the general public is the same," she says breezily. She has "entrepreneurship in my blood" - she just doesn't know what that entails.

Mondal advises, "Step one, build a pitch deck." Roxy's face goes blank. "Are you getting this, Elise?" she asks. Elise scribbles in a notebook.

Mondal suggests a funding plan. "Did you get that down, Elise?" Roxy asks.

"Traction," Mondal says. "Traction, Elise," Roxy parrots, understanding nothing. Dear Millennial Elise, with

A new beginning for newcomers

Financial program helps new Canadians build their future

For immigrants, foreign workers and international students new to Canada, one of the first priorities is getting on a firm financial footing.

Opening an account with a Canadian bank doesn't just address immediate needs like building savings or establishing a credit rating - it also helps set long-term goals like buying a home or getting a business loan.

To help newcomers build a strong financial foundation in Canada, Scotiabank in 2008 launched its StartRight program. The goal of the program is "to help newcomers open the door to their new start in Canada," says Munsif Sheraly, Director of Multicultural Banking at Scotiabank. The program functions as a one-stop shop that helps newcomers with various aspects of their life in Canada. "From setting up your bank account and managing your money to investing for your future," says Sheraly, "Scotiabank offers the right solutions and advice."

"FROM SETTING UP YOUR BANK ACCOUNT AND MANAGING YOUR MONEY TO INVESTING FOR YOUR FUTURE, SCOTIABANK OFFERS THE RIGHT SOLUTIONS AND ADVICE."

Munsif Sheraly

Because Scotiabank has partnerships with financial institutions around the world, StartRight lets new Canadians open an account even before they arrive in this country. Newcomers can open accounts online before arriving from 16 countries including Chile, Columbia, India, the U.K. and more - and transfer money into that account so it's available when they arrive in Canada. Enrico, a StartRight participant, set up a Scotiabank account before he and his family left their native Philippines. "From there we could start building our credit rating," he says. "And when we got to Canada we had a credit card — absent a job, income or credit history - within a week's time."

While every immigrant success story is unique, there are a few common factors when it comes to feeling financially settled in a new country. Intangible benefits, such as being able to speak to an advisor in your own language, can go a long way toward making newcomers feel comfortable in their adopted home. And because the StartRight program has been actively working with immigrant, foreign worker and international student communities for almost a decade, its advisors have a lot of experience serving newcomers and their unique needs.

Among the direct help StartRight offers: Newcomers who open an account through StartRight get $300 in banking benefits. The program also offers specialty products such as the StartRight mortgage program and the StartRight auto finance program. And its advisors work with various settlement agencies and local community groups to further help newcomers settle in. The Scotiabank StartRight program is available at any Scotiabank branch in Canada or by visiting scotiabank.com/newtocanada.

However you say "home," we speak your language.

With the Scotiabank StartRight" Program', newcomers can get over $300° in banking benefits.

As a newcomer to Canada, you have questions. A Scotiabank advisor is ready to answer them all, and provide the advice you need to get established and build confidence. Let's talk about your own unique goals.

Ex-players pledge brains to CTE research

Two more retired football stars have pledged their brains to research.

Two-time Super Bowl champion Leonard Marshall and three-time Pro Bowl selection Matt Hasselbeck say they will donate their brains to the Concussion Legacy Foundation for research into chronic traumatic encephalopathy.

The announcements were made Wednesday as part of the second annual Brain Trust conference, which is hosted by the Department of Veterans Affairs. Marshall says he already has short-term memory loss and erratic behaviour. The former New York Giants defensive lineman is 55. Hasselbeck's father, Don, was a teammate of Marshall's on the Giants and pledged his brain to the foundation in 2010.

More than 1,800 former athletes and military veterans have pledged to donate their brains to the Concussion Legacy Foundation for CTE research. The progressive degenerative brain disease has been linked to repeated head trauma

Raonic reaches 3rd round with win over Haas in Rome

Canada's Milos Raonic advanced to the third round of the Italian Open with a 6-4, 6-3 win over Germany's Tommy Haas on Wednesday.

Raonic, from Thornhill, Ont., used his dominant serve to dispatch Haas in a little over an hour. Raonic lost only 13 service points while firing 10 aces past the 39-year-old veteran and saving both break points he faced.

In a further blow to FIFA's image under president Gianni Infantino, two more respected members of its governance oversight panel have left following the removal of their chairman last week. ### Sens' offence ascends in Ottawa

The Ottawa Senators needed less than 13 minutes to put away Game 3 of the Eastern Conference final.

Ottawa got four goals past Marc-Andre Fleury in the first 12 minutes and 52 seconds including the fastest three goals in team playoff history - and went on to top the Pittsburgh Penguins 5-1 Wednesday night at Canadian Tire Centre.

Kyle Turris, Derick Brassard, Mike Hoffman and Marc Methot each had a goal and an assist and Craig Anderson stopped 25 shots in the victory, which gives the Sens a 2-1 series edge with Game 4 ahead on Friday night.

GAME3 In Ottawa

Zack Samith also scored and Bobby Ryan had two helpers for Ottawa, who suddenly has the upper hand in a series most expected to go the Penguins way.

Sidney Crosby had the lone marker for Pittsburgh, which has scored only three goals all series. Fleury gave up four on nine shots and was replaced by Matt Murray, who made 19 saves.

Hosting their first Eastern Conference final game in 10 years, the Sens came out flying and scored after only 48 seconds. Hoffman got it by capitalizing on a Turris shot that bounced awkwardly wide of the goal. The 27-year-old stuffed the shot, standing to the left of the goal, just between the post and right pad of Fleury. THE CANADIAN PRESS

MAKE IT TONIGHT —

Hearty Panzanella Salad

Ceri Marsh & Laura Keogh For Metro Canada

This hearty salad is delicious on its own, but feel free to make it into a more complete meal by topping it with chopped rotisserie chicken.

Ready in 15 minutes

Prep Time: 10 minutes Cooking time: 5 minutes

Ingredients

- 4 cups of slightly stale crusty bread, like baguette
- 4 tomatoes roughly chopped
- 1 cucumber peeled and
- roughly chopped 1 yellow pepper
- 1/2 red onion finely sliced or chopped
- 1/2 cup pitted black olives
- 1/2 cup or so of shaved parmesan
- 1 cup extra virgin olive oil 1/2 red wine vinegar

1/2 Tbsp dijon mustard salt and pepper to taste

Directions

- 1. Toss the first seven ingredients in your salad bowl first so that everything is evenly distributed.
- 2. Whisk together the last four ingredients in a small bowl until they are well combine.
- 3. There will be more dressing than you need, but you'll need more than you'd use for a regular salad as the bread will drink it up. Keep adding the dressing and tossing and tasting. You want to the bread to be moist and soften but not drowned by the dressing.

* IT'S ALL IN THE STARS Your daily horoscope by Francis Drake

Aries March 21 - April 20 Be prepared to act on an unexpected opportunity in publishing, the media, medicine, the law or anything to do with training and higher education. You will have to act quickly.

Taurus April 21 - May 21 You might see new and innovative ways to approach an inheritance or shared property. Be open. The rigid tree is the first to snap in a storm.

II Gemini May 22 - June 21 Difficulties in partnerships and close friendships suddenly might reveal a solution or a way to feel more free. Whatever presents itself will have a brief window of opportunity.

Cancer June 22 - July 23 New ideas that are imaginative and original might help you at work. Similarly, new ideas also might give you a boost to your health. Keep an open mind (but not so open that everything falls out).

Leo July 24 - Aug. 23 A new approach to working with children might arise now. Whatever happens will be a welcome change.

W Virgo Aug. 24 - Sept. 23 You might see new ways to make improvements where you live. You might even decide to move to a new place. It's possible that family news will surprise you.

Libra Sept. 24 - Oct. 23 A surprise opportunity to change jobs or residences might fall in your lap. If so, be ready to act quickly, because the window of opportunity is brief.

Scorpio Oct. 24 - Nov. 22 You might see improved and innovative ideas about how to earn money. You might improve your current job or get a better job - who knows?

Sagittarius Nov. 23 - Dec. 21 You are pumped with enthusiasm because you see a way to make a breakthrough in a new area that you are exploring. Something definitely will expand your world, and it's exciting!

Capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 20 After giving up so much for others, you are starting to see a light at the end of the tunnel. Something ahead looks promising!

Aquarius Jan. 21 - Feb. 19 New friends and contacts with groups and organizations might change your world. You will expand it in a way that makes you feel more in touch with how things are done.

H Pisces

Feb. 20 - March 20 Surprise opportunities that can help you in your career are now at hand. Don't hesitate to take them. (You might not get a second chance.)
